

Zen Preface

Enter into the awareness of Zen.

Aim to completely cleanse the body and mind in order to return them to their original state of purity and clarity...

Accept nothing less than that which is fresh, pure and perfected... No longer stands the saying 'what's good for you will taste bad'.

On mixed drinks, Zen says: "Emphasis should not rest upon haste and convenience or on the quick fixes and imitations that often come in the hectic ways of the western world. Example should derive from the east, where an alternative lifestyle has resulted in optimum health for centuries."

Through presentation, aroma and taste, let your senses be fulfilled, and with an infusion of flavours carefully selected and crafted, let your body be reawakened.

In Zen everything is done whole heartedly, or not at all!

*Sauvignon Blanc is one of the most recognisable of the grape varieties for its grassy, flowering currant and gooseberry flavours combined with its dry, zingy style. It has a far narrower range of flavours than those of the Chardonnay grape and adapts less well to climates that are too hot, making it lose aroma, acidity and become too heavy. This is because it can be used to produce everything from a long-lived wine of great complexity, to a simple everyday white-making it the most versatile of varieties. Synonymous with serious red wine capable of ageing into subtle splendour, Cabernet Sauvignon is grown just about everywhere in the winemaking world. With admirable consistency it yields the familiar aroma and flavour of blackcurrants, with a vanilla whiff of new oak. There might be a touch of cedar or lead pencils if it is Bordeaux, and mint if it is New World. In a cool climate it can be lean and angular, while the New World versions are generally fuller bodied with riper fruit, and a more Chocolatey and richer flavour.

It can also, in cooler climates, make fruity wines taste largely of pepper, raspberry and herbs. Shiraz's main home is in Rhone Valley, France, with Australia also being another main home and big producer of this wine.
